Stress in the Workplace

The Health and Safety Executive define stress as:

“The adverse reaction people have to excessive pressure or other types of demand placed on them”.

This makes an important distinction between pressure, which can be a positive state if managed correctly pressure and challenge, even when high can be motivating and stimulating. However, when an individual feels pressure at a time when they cannot cope, or in some cases too little pressure or challenge, this can lead to stress. It is important to recognise that the ability to cope with stress differs from person to person and it will depend on the individual as to how they react to stress.

Primary sources of stress are:

- Demands: i.e. workload, work pattern, and the work environment
- Control: i.e. how much say the person has in the way they work
- Support: the encouragement, sponsorship and resources provided by the organisation, line management and colleagues
- Relationships: i.e. promoting positive working to avoid conflict and dealing with unacceptable behaviour
- Role: such as whether people understand their role within the organisation and whether the organisation ensures that they do not have conflicting roles.
- Change: such as how organisational change (large or small) is managed and communicated within the organisation

Examples of additional pressure to staff may include:

- Dealing with bad behaviour
- Academy audits
- Accountability and targets.
- Finance
- Buildings matters
- Recruitment and staffing issues

- Conflict in the workplace

In order to combat these areas of pressure, staff should be able to admit that they are struggling before it becomes too difficult to cope with and know who to call on for support and advice if they need it.

The following are examples of how staff can help themselves:

- Ask your line manager or another colleague for help and support if you need it.
- If you need something to change, find a way to make it change.
- Own up to your problems and be honest about them, express your feelings and do not internalise your concerns.
- Make yourself aware of the Clubs policies and procedures.
- Take a break from work during the middle of the day, it is your entitlement.
- Identify opportunities for development relevant to your position.
- Use the performance management to identify your achievements and establish support required to meet your goals.
- Be honest about reasons for sickness absence and any request of leave of absence.
- Try to have a good diet, don't skip meals, drinking plenty of water throughout the day.

Make time for exercise and relaxation and learn to manage your time effectively.
